Omaha Print Earns Chain of Custody Certification

OMAHA, Neb — The Forest Stewardship Council (FSC) has announced that Omaha Print has earned the organization's Chain-of-Custody (COC) certification. Omaha Print is the first printing company in the metro area to receive the certification.

The certification, which is valid through January 2013, allows Omaha Print to promote its use of environmentally preferable paper, by applying the FSC logo to any of its final products. FSC's model of certification allows products that flow from certified forests to enter the marketplace with a unique credential.

“Omaha Print is a company that is committed to doing things in a responsible manner,” said Steve Hayes, CEO of Omaha Print. “Earning this certification from the Forest Stewardship Council is just another example of our respect for this country's resources.”

Omaha Print has been environmentally conscious for many years. The company achieves its high standards by reducing the emissions of reactive organic gasses, printing with inks that contain 30 percent vegetable oil, ongoing maintenance of catalytic converters in order to eliminate pollutants, waste minimization and off-site recycling of numerous products.

Omaha Print, founded in 1858, is headquartered in Omaha, with a sales office in Dallas. The company recently completed a 25,000-square-foot addition to its Omaha production facility to support increased capacity. The production facility is home to sheet fed, heat set web and cold set web presses, and a full bindery. For more information about Omaha Print, visit www.omahaprint.com, or call 800-369-0033.
